

Scotland's proud cup-holders, Celtic, came out first at Hampden Park - ready to meet the continued challenge of Clyde - in this All-Glasgow Final replay.

In the centre circle, Anderson spins the coin - and Jock Stein's ~~kick~~ ^{call} wins a cheer from Celtic fans.

Clyde (in white shirts) ~~to~~ kick off - and away they go - determined that this time - ~~they will not need~~ ^{NOT THAT} they'll need for last-minute equaliser. But it's Celtic (the seasoned cup-fighters, and seventeen times winners of the trophy) who launch the first sustained attack. A fierce all-out offensive that keeps Clyde at full stretch.

A raid by Clyde now - that gives their defenders welcome respite. And - this time - it's that Celtic rear-guard that pulls out all the stops - denying ~~that~~ ^a clear sight of goal to those eager, rampaging forwards.

Clyde still pressing - but the road to goal is barred ^a clearance sends them back. A lightning Celtic raid, now - but that, too, breaks down. At this stage - the defences are on top.

Another Clyde attack - and by sheer persistence - a goal opening is won - and lost - as Bonnar saves in grand style.

No score at half-time - and Celtic start the second period, looking like business. That means non-stop work for those Clyde defenders.

And Hewkins, their South African goallie, brings off a wonder save.

Then - that single victory goal, scored by Tommy Ring. Clyde one-up.

A fortunate goal, perhaps, but taken in the right spirit - for only that half-chance, could separate two great East-End rivals.

Mounting the stairway of victory, Tommy Anderson has a quick clean-up - then receives the trophy from Lord MacGowan... After sixteen years - the Cup returns to Shawfield Park. Well done, Clyde.
