

In Edinburgh, the combined Cadet Force of Daniel Stewart's College ~~welcomed~~ welcomed the Duke of Edinburgh - when he visited this noted academic institution - which this year celebrates its centenary....

And on this day, which brought the start of another (treasured) Royal Visit to Scotland, the Duke visited the Caledonia Flour Mill, at Leith, and watched the ~~various processing~~ ^{process} of flour - before it becomes our daily bread.

Making an extensive tour of the Mill (which is nearing completion) the Duke spent some time examining the complicated modern machinery - so different from the primitive grinding - that was once done by hand. The building has cost Two Million Pounds and will be in production by the Autumn.

Before leaving, Mr. J. Arthur Rank presented his Royal Guest with the replica of a windmill, as a memento of his visit.

That same evening - the Duke visited another academic landmark in the Capital - when he was installed as an Honorary Fellow of the Royal College of Surgeons of Edinburgh....

On arrival - the Royal Nominee was introduced ~~by the Vice-President of the College~~ by the Vice-President of the College, Professor Alexander. SOUND

After taking the oath, the Duke received his ceremonial robes (the first member of the Royal Family to be received into the Fellowship for over two hundred years); and then addressed the gathering. SOUND.
