

In a final survey of the 1955 Wimbledon - pride of place must go ^{to} that great battle between Louise Brough and Mrs Fleitz for the Women's Crown... What a memorable come-back for Louise Brough - who last won the title five years ago!

Mrs Fleitz (fresh from her triumph over Doris Hart) found it really tough going against the wily tactics of her rival.

Louise, too, ^(NEAREST CAMERA) was almost ready to drop when she won that final point to triumph 7-5, 8-6 - and gain her fourth Wimbledon crown.

The Men's Singles deservedly went to the top seed, Tony Trabert (nearer the camera).

Watch for that beautiful lob that beat his game challenger - Kurt Nielsen

For the first time since the war - one title was destined to stay at home when we saw the first all-British Women's Doubles Final since 1929...

^{THERE WERE SOME LIVELY RALLIES.} Here are Angela Mortimer and Anne Shilcock, the winning pair, in action

And for gallant ~~fighters~~ Pat Ward and Shirley Bloomer (at the far end) this was the end - 7-5, 6-1...

^{AND AS THE} ~~the~~ Duchess of Kent presented the trophy to ~~the winners~~ ^{THE WINNERS, WE APPLAUDED}

~~our~~ our first Doubles Champions since 1936..
