Calcis: With his home-made "flying birdcage," an intrepid French pilot, Jean Salis turns back the years as he takes off - bound for Dover ... The fifty-nine yearold Frenchman was paying tribute to Louis Bleriot - the brave pioneer of Channel flight. And these historic pictures show Bleriot making that first crossing; thirty-seven minutes, from Calais to Dover, inxxulyxxledexx in July, 1909... Now -/on the forty-sixth anniversary of that initial crossing - the modern e prosecuis fraild string machine) "Bleriot" (flying an exact replice of Bl SALAS crossed the Channel in exactly sights the welcome Cliffs of Dover the same time, thirty-seven minutes ... was forced, by modern regulations, to But unlike the pioneer, A perfect these point lending. land at an official airport. After the flight - inche -which was made without modern navigational aids -a Juan Salis was full of praise for the skill and courage of his one-time flying instructor - the great Bleriot ... The crossing also commemorates the fiftieth anniversary of Entente Cordials and the congratulations of Maximum Entertains Mr Geoffrey Lloyd,

Minister of Fuel and Power brought a gallant French response SOUND.