Arriving in Copenhagen Harbour, the Royal Yacht "Britannia" received a surprise visitor, King Frederick of Denmark - who went aboard to welcome the Duke of Edinburgh to his lovely country.

The Duke's visit co-incided with the staging of the British Trade Fair - part of which is being held in the famous Tivoli Gardens.

By his detailed tour of the Exhibition - (the first to be held in Denmark for seven years) - the Duke was making a personal contribution to the vital drive to expand our world trade. (2)

Besides the representative sections of industry and commerce - fashions of every kind made a stylish addition to the "Buy British" campaign.

But don't worry - we're not exporting "the local"! This replica of a typical country inn is just our way of spreading international friendship.

Back home, the White City highlights international rivalry born of sincere admiration and friendship, as Emil Zatopek leads Gordon Pirie and Ken Norris in the ten thousand metres.

For years, Pirie has corresponded with the famous Czech. Now - unleashing a terrific sprint, he achieves his greatest triumph by defeating his idol over this distance for the first time....during the London-Prague match - sponsored by the Evening News.

Pirie's time was the fastest-ever recorded in Britain, and Ken Norris was second.

At Wembley, lightweight Brian Jones just couldn't wait to extend the gloved hand of friendship to Boris Golubenko - his Russian rival.

This was the first visit of a Russian boxing team to meet Great Britain - and both boys were soon making up for lost time.

Always full of aggression, the Nottingham boy cheered home fans.

He gained one of our only two victories in reply to Russia's eight.

Meanwhile, on waves of goodwill, a Soviet Naval squadron (led by the cruiser Sverdlov) came sailing into Portsmouth Harbour.
