

Floods

British Columbia: Swirling streams turn many Vancouver highways into raging torrents, as continuous torrential rain brings record floods.

The serious inundations of 1949 have been described as a "trickle" compared with the present rampage of waters.

Swollen rivers cut out new water-courses, wrecking many a home, after Nature - in one of her most damaging moods - let loose over five inches of rain in twenty-four hours..

(A-STATION).