

Warming<sup>up</sup> the wintry outlook, the National Fashion Fair brings a promise of summer days to the Royal Albert Hall.

Thousands of buyers visited the Fair, to select the fashions (~~like~~<sup>like</sup> this <sup>convertible</sup> divided skirt: easily converted for everyday use), that will be seen in the shops and on the open road next year...

Admiring one of the new season's swimsuits is film starlet Beverley Brook - herself a former model. And she just couldn't resist "getting into the act!"

This year, a new type of continental fashion-lore<sup>has</sup> had an "arresting influence on the show." <sup>Yes, the</sup> Separates hold the stage. This one was designed in Madrid, in the Spanish National colours. The skirt has a twelve-yard hemline.

The gendarme - (the official escort to five French models appearing at the show) - admires the charm of "Primaure - a blue and flame combination in printed cotton." ~~...the... round off the...~~

A blend of old and new is this model, named ~~Primaure~~ "Sedre". The medieval pattern in printed cotton is combined with the new "cowl neckline." 2

Separates for casual wear, too; flock skirts in straw cloth - worn with sleeveless cotton poplin blouses.

So, in continental style, if you want to know the line - ask a Gendarme. Now to the bobby-soxers, featured at another London show to prove that a young girl's best friend is the Teenage Fashion Group.

This organisation caters exclusively for the "Junior Miss" - designing styles that develop <sup>PERSONALITY</sup> ~~individuality~~ and good dress sense...

Over in Munich, tiny tots enter the fashion parade - with outfits, both for that party occasion and the winter playground...

~~There's nothing like making the grade early in life. ... where do we go from here?~~

Right back to the nursery - we can't all be model children.
