

Oxford V Cambridge

At Twickenham, Oxford, the pre-match favourites, kicked off in the 74th "Battle of the Blues" - hoping (through superior half-back strength) to gain their first victory since 1951...

With two freescoring fifteens in opposition - anything could happen - and it did - when Kershaw (intercepting a bad pass) raced away to touch down for the Light Blues...

And, from right in front of the post - Hetherington added the goal points. Oxford's fighting reply started with a lightning dash by <sup>MTK</sup> Smith, (their cricket captain), that won a penalty for obstruction and three points for Currie's successful kick.

~~Still trailing by five points to three at the interval Oxford opened up the game~~
~~Two points behind at the interval Oxford~~

In the second half, Oxford (who were losing by five points to three) really opened up the game, and <sup>WALKER</sup> ~~Walker~~ squeezed round on the outside - to score a grand try.

Oxford continued their open football, and this refreshing new approach to the Varsity game, brought <sup>them</sup> another try and a well-~~deserved~~ <sup>earned</sup> victory by nine points to five.
