

Though one would have thought that the ~~more~~ clash of Celtic rivals would thaw any ice-bound pitch - extra heating arrangements had to be made before Cardiff Arms Park could bear the imprint of the international battle between Wales and Scotland.

Just like almost every household, Welsh fans were bursting with leeks (and confidence) as their fellow-countrymen launched the opening attack. A confidence founded on earlier victory - that great ^{recent} triumph over ~~Scotland~~ ~~at~~ Twickenham.

Scotland (in dark jerseys) with their new-found forward strength - were level for nineteen minutes - then, a Cliff Morgan break-through led to his namesake going over in the corner.

A well-^{MERITED}~~merited~~ three-point lead for Wales: but full of fight - the Scots came ~~fix~~ storming back into the game, and a bout of sustained pressure led to a penalty on the Welsh 25.

Skipper Cameron took the kick and gathered the vital points. Scotland ~~was~~ were level.

Now we say that Welsh fire is not only confined to thawing out a pitch and, once again, Cliff Morgan paved the way - sending C.L. Davies speeding along the touch-line - to score.

Wales Six. Scotland Three. and early in the second half came ~~that~~ A ^{GREAT}~~debatable~~ effort by Ken Jones - playing in his 41st international. The safe Welsh passing - ^{COMBINED}~~combined~~ ^{AND} with superior back-play dominated the game. And finally, the combined genius of Brace and Morgan brought the final try - and a Welsh victory by nine points to three.
