

Kenya: A pageant of African progress welcomed Princess Margaret to Machakos, where she visited the Kamba tribe - renowned for its courage and hospitality.

There were flowers, too, a fragrant offering in this hot and dusty upland ~~upland~~ country.

Besides the traditional dances of welcome - the pageant ~~was~~ portrayed the evolution of the loyal Kamba - from brave warriors into peaceful farmers - with ~~the~~ ^{BRITISH} encouragement and help ~~of British administration.~~ ^{have.}

During the Mau Mau emergency, the Kamba/faithfully served the Government. Now, they gave an enthusiastic farewell to their Royal Visitor - when she left Machakos - one of the earliest white settlements.

During her stay at this lodge, on the Ambolesi Game Reserve, the Princess made an evening safari - and saw ~~horns devouring their kill.~~ ^{WILD ANIMALS IN NATURAL SURROUNDINGS.}

Then, back to Nairobi, for the opening of the new Royal Technical College of East Africa - the last major engagement of the tour.

So, after a job well done - the Princess returned home, ^{journey's.} ~~with~~ happy memories of her ~~and of the progress of loyal African peoples~~ ^{and} towards a richer, fuller life.

So, with happy memories of her ^{journey} ~~tour~~, and of the progress of Loyal African peoples towards a richer, fuller life, the Princess returned home.

And to round off this strenuous fifteen thousand mile tour, there was a personal "Well Done" from the Queen, who, with the Queen Mother, led the welcome home at London Airport.
