

At Twickenham, Oxford (in dark jerseys) kicked off - hoping to repeat last year's brilliant victory to mark the 75th Rugby Battle of the Blues. But Cambridge had other ideas, and, in the opening minutes, Barter crossed for a try - and Horrocks-Taylor added the extra points. There's nothing like an early five-point lead in a Varsity match, and with a confidence born of points in the bag - Cambridge surged into the attack.

And went further ahead when Horrocks-Taylor touched down - again right under the posts.

Eight points down in twelve minutes - Oxford were wondering what hit them - but Currie led the recovery with a brilliant penalty kick.

So to the second half - Cambridge leading by eight points to three - but not for long. A well-earned try brought Oxford right back into the game.

But, with the benefit of that flying start, <sup>but</sup> the Light Blues kept ahead on points - and gained their twenty-ninth victory in the series by fourteen points to nine.
