Schoolboys' International

2nd April 1957

Wembley: Ninety-thousand fans for a Schoolboys' International. Welcome encouragement that was richly rewarded when England (in white) kicked off against Wales. A brilliant four-man movement, and right-winger Woodley bangs the ball home.

That shock-goal (in thirteen seconds) gave the English boys a real tonic for ~~these~~ Wembley nerves - and soon that Welsh goal was suffering some narrow escapes.

A plucky side, Wales improved as they got into their stride - and launched some ~~rather~~^{some} dangerous attacks.

England finally won two-nothing, with a goal by Colin Brooks.

But whatever the result, the soccer future of England and Wales ~~is in~~^{seems to} be in capable young hands.
