

An emblem of chivalry that inspired ~~the~~ crusading knights of old - the banner of St. George still bears ^{its} patriotic message.

Paying tribute to the Patron Saint of England - the Royal Society of St. George combined its annual service with a parade in Trafalgar Square

The Inspecting Officer was Admiral of the Fleet Sir Arthur Power - and there were many decorated heroes on parade - ~~for St. George's Day~~ ^{on a day that} holds ^{such} ~~important~~ memories of English valour.../S

In Wales, too, they celebrated an occasion of national interest, when the Duke of Edinburgh (wearing the uniform of the Welsh Guards) was welcomed to Cardiff Castle.

The Royal Visit marked the bestowal of civic honours on the Welsh Guards.

The Lord Mayor of Cardiff handed the freedom scroll to Prince Philip (already a Freeman of the City) who replied as Colonel of the Regiment. SOUND.

This ~~of~~ distinction (in recognition of the Regiment's glorious achievements) grants full rights and privileges, including the honour of marching through the ^{Welsh} Capital with bands playing and colours flying.

PRINCE PHILIP

Next day, there was ~~another~~ ^{A FURTHER} tribute to St. George, when Her Majesty AND received over 1,000 Queen's Scouts of thirty-two Commonwealth countries in the Quadrangle of Windsor Castle.

Accompanied by Lord Rowallan, the Chief Scout, the Queen and her husband brought fresh encouragement to disabled Scouts.

In the care of Princess Margaret, the Royal Children watched from a window - as the Scouts marched past the Queen - on their way to a service in St. George's Chapel.

YES!

~~the day was a splendid success in every way~~ - Everything went with a swing.

~~AS THE ROYAL~~ children shared a Scout tribute to St. George (the Patron Saint of the Movement) in their Jubilee Year. SOUND
