

THE KING'S TOUR.

Outriders of the American Military Police Force escort the King's car on his arrival at a Tunisian town to review units of the American Fifth Army. It's Commander , General Clark, was able to show His Majesty much to interest him. Here were men who had born themselves proudly in the great battles during the Allied Campaign in North Africa, and are now ready for the next big move.

The break for lunch, prepared by an Engineer kitchen Unit, and served from regulation Army Mess kits. General issue rations, eaten in a pine-grove just off the main road.

We know that the Americans were delighted by the King's visit. He has created a lasting affection in the minds of Uncle Sam's boys.

During the time when His Majesty was in Algiers, he paid a visit to the Dockyards there to inspect personnel of the Allied navies. Merchant Seamen were there too.... ship's companies representing two nations in a joint parade. Our King is now home again; but nothing can dim the memory of this African visit which took him among the men on active service.
