

THE QUEEN VISITS A. T. S.

During a whole day's visiting of A. T. S. units serving in the Greater London Area, the Queen and the Princess Royal saw some of the extensive work being done at an Ordnance Depot. It was at the Quarter Master's Stores that Her Majesty received first hand information from the girls who work there, on the vast range of articles handled every day.

Second from the right is the Prime Minister's daughter, Mary Churchill. Her Majesty was then at an anti-aircraft battery where girls work the predictors which serve the gunners. It is a well known fact that our anti-aircraft defence system is largely operated by girls.

The Queen's visit to the gun pits was another illustration of Her Majesty's deep interest in the Auxiliary Territorial Service.
