FIFTH ARMY ON THE SOUTHERN FRONT.

Into the Salerno bridgehead are pouring more men of the Anglo-American 5th Army. Heavily reinforced by powerful new units and welded with the 8th, the allies are driving the Germans into the hills and preparing for the assault on the defences round Naples.

German shore batteries open fire, dropping their shells among the landing craft. An American signaller flags his message inspite of the flying shrapnel.

Penetrating inland along the road to BATTIPAGLIA.

German prisoners brought in at the double. Young, arrogant Nazis who may try to come on the bounce with our lads - but only once.

The former Italian Commandant of Monte Cervino Airfield points out to the Royal Engineers where mines and booby traps were placed.

An incident in the Italian swing-over to the allied invasion.

Go live read how British gunners lay down a barrage - now watch them doing the old Alamein-Mareth rapid fire trick.

All roads lead to Rome. This one is via the German-held city of Naples.
