EISENHOWER INSPECTS.

An entire division parades for inspection by General Eisenhower. This is the first time that the Commander-in-Chief has inspected a British Division about to be linked with American forces in the Mediterranean theatre of operations. The lines of men in their shirt sleeves and khaki shorts moving ceremoniously past the saluting base.

The welding of British and American fighting power is daily becoming more and more apparent. In the field, in the air and afloat the brotherhood of the two nations is something much more than a relationship fostered by war; it is the awakening by both to their common destiny and heritage.
