

FEEDING THE CHILDREN.

The Bambino's Bean Feast. This humanitarian act of feeding little Italians grew out of the first few confused days of settling in at an R.A.F. Station. The kiddies used to swarm outside the airmen's mess tents craving food. In a very short while things were organized, and now, each meal time, surplus food is served out to them by Cookhouse Orderlies. It's easy to see how they love these treats. Instead of cadging crumbs, they receive three good meals a day from these unofficial welfare workers of the R.A.F.

TOURISTS....1943 STYLE.

Once upon a time it was hotel labels on cabin trunks which told the tale of travel. Nowadays the uniformed tourist keeps tabs on his travelling this way. They don't mean to forget the names which won't be found in future holiday manuals, but the history books.

The same idea spreads into feminine fashions. In Cairo our cameraman Terry Ashwood sees how girls there have embroidered their blouses and, in this case, kept a record of air travel on a handbag.

You won't find a girl there who wears her heart on her sleeve - but an 8th Army heart-throb on the shoes is different. And how's this for the right way to back a winner?
