LORD LOUIS IN INDIA.

Completing his journey in the Liberator "MARCO POLO" which flew him from England, Admiral Lord Louis Mountbatten, Supreme Commander of the South-East Asia Command, arrives in New Delhi. He is staying there a few days for consultation with General Auchinleck before travelling on to Chungking.

It should not be long before we hear of big events taking place in Burma regions where an intensification of action is expected.

HEAD LINE IN NAPLES.

Shiploads of white flour arrive in Naples; the first in three years to come to Italy. Allied Military Government officials check the imports from deckside to purchaser. Careful control is kept, from the time it goes to the grain merchants (who in turn sell to the bakers) to the moment when an almost hysterical mob try to get their hands on it. At that point control becomes tough.

There's a big feller in there who, to my way of thinking, hasn't got the Fascist microbe out of his system.

The bread queue forms up under the doughboys. The ration is about half a loaf each for two days - and it's white.
