REMEMBRANCE DAY IN TUNIS

One place in the world which went out of its way to recognize the 11th November was Tunis. Armistice Day was celebrated with a special ceremony in which British, American and French troops were predominant. General Spaatz Commanding the American North African Air Force was among the many notable figures seen in the main square, where the flame at the tomb of the Unknown French Warrior of the Tunisian Campaign was re-kindled. The sons of the Bey of Tunis were onlookers at the colourful parade by representative detachments of the three Allies which rounded off the ceremony.

Remembrance Day in Tunis lacked nothing in brilliance. It pleased the eye and afforded the French plenty of scope to use their natural aptitude for display.
