Men of the first Brazilian Expeditionary Force receive battle flags made by the women of Sao Paulo. Before sailing for overseas service, they are reviewed by the War Minister and his staff. Brazilian soldiers will shortly give account of themselves on the fighting fronts. The Women's Legion takes part in the national salute.

What a sight for tired business men. Here's Miss Australia's answer to the man shortage among life savers. On Surf beaches of New South Wales they maintain a one hundred per cent feminine watch over the swimmers at Bondi, Geogee and Manley.

Paying out the life line to someone up to their neck in rough water. The temptation to kid you can't swim must be very great.

From Malta come these pictures of Yugoslav Partisans -- men and women -- recovering from wounds gained in battle in their own country. The period of recuperation on the Island is employed in training and instruction. After discharge from hospital these hardy guerilla warriors, refusing to idle their time away, ready themselves for the moment when they will return to the ranks of Marshal Josip Broz -- Marshal Broz -- better known as "TITO".

America's famous Jeep is joined by a new and larger scout car. Ten men can ride in this big brother of the War's most versatile vehicle. Its the super Jeep designed principally for shore patrol.

Here's the little feller taking a flying tackle at a sand dune; it digs in like a beach bug.

Up comes the Super Jeep and goes through. I think the ten men are still alive!

Germany's much boasted secret weapon (the miniature tank which the Allies nickname the Doodlebug) has not proved a great success. Here's a sample from Axis. The beetle tanks, (remote controlled by a trailing cable,) are driven into defence works and there exploded. They carry a 250 lb charge which is fired from long distance by a detonator. The Jerries tried them out on the Russian front as well, but there too the Doodlebug failed to come up to expectations.
