GREAT AIRCOFFENSIVE.

Europe hangs under a cloud of Allied bombers. German radio stations send out their warnings of strong formations of enemy aircraft approaching Reich territory.

Then the radio stations fade out; Silence by the many hundreds of Allied aircraft coming with remorseless precision to wreck the factories harnessed to Hitler's war machine. Bombs are emptied out like matches out of a box. To maintain production and supply under the constant hammering from the air is Germany's greatest problem.

In these great air battles are the fighters. German E.Beats come under the hail of cannon fire.

More combat pictures, hot out of recent air fights over Europe, show the Luftwaffe being well and truly beaten up. Each individual sequence marks up a kill. Each plane and Pilot lost is one the harder for them to replace. While the allied bombers take care of the centres of supply our fighter pilots sap the strength of their front line force.

Where squadrons leave off, other squadrons begin. It never starts, it never stops; in varying degrees of intensity it goes on all the time.
