

2-FF-001
64-73

V 1 SITES.

As the victorious Allied armies engulf Hitler's Flying bomb coast, more and more of his launching places are falling into our hands. These rail-tracks are part of a site captured near Rouen. On a map of England are marked the big towns which the Nazis hoped to destroy with their V1. In block houses, equipment and personnel sought to escape the R.A.F., but there are plenty of signs of the havoc our bombers caused.

The two spheres are compressed air bottles which supply life to the beast.

Smaller tracks carried trolleys bearing flying bomb parts for assembly at the launching points.

A considerable number of flying bombs crashed before they were properly air borne. As we go to print, the full story of the conquest of V1 has been told, ending with the heartening words: "Except possibly for a few last shots, the battle of London is over".

.....