LOUVAIN... LUXEMBIURG LE HAVRE.

The City Hall of Louvain, looted for the second time in 25 years by the Germans. It was here that, 4 years ago, Monty left a brown pullover. Now he and his troops are back, and Belgian Menks have returned it. Citizens of the picturesque town of Luxembourg, capital of the tiny state between the Belgian and German borders, greet Prince Felix as he returns after Allied Troops have liberated the city. Another European Capital shows what it thinks of the Nazi flag.

A suicide Squad of 9,000 Germans was left by the enemy to hold the important French Port of Le Havre. Allied warships, planes and artillery have given the town a terrific pounding to blast the Nazis out. Dempsey's Tanks and men go forward.

German soldiers and sailors realising that further resistance is futile, give themselves up.

Frenchmen settle accounts with Nazi snipers.

The haul of German prisoners grows larger. Some of the garrison who escaped certain destruction. The Nazi "stand and die" order condemned many of their comrades.

And so another German garrison, tired of senseless sacrifice against overwhelming odds, is brought low by the Allies.
