EUROPEAN WAR REPORT.

The U. Boat pens at Le Havre and Marseilles are open for inspection - the bases from which the German wolf-packs once operated against our convoys have taken a solid beating. At the massiveness of their construction and the complexity of the fortifications were not proof against determined onslaught from the air.

After long and bitter fighting the cornered Germans in the Port of Brest throw in their hand: These scenes were taken in Woodrow Wilson Square in the centre of the town.....where the German Commander formally surrendered. Heil and farewell.

With the surrender of Boulogne these monster-cross channel guns are silenced for good. Their giant fourteen-inch muzzles will no longer menace the people of Hell Fire Corner. It was from here and other coastal gun sites that the vicinity of Dover received its four years bombardment.....

T.N.T. Blows gaps in the Siegfried Line.

This delightfully situated country house is vacant. The Nazis who manned the pillbox it so cunningly concealed have been chased out. No welcome on the mat here....just steel and concrete pierced with peep-holes, through which the Siegfried Line defenders took their last look at the Advancing Allies.

The first village on the soil of Germany comes under Allied Military Government. Notices are posted instructing the inhabitants to report for registration. From now on, these people will take their orders not from Hitler but from us.
