PLYMOUTH - THE DUKE & DUCHESS OF WINDSOR

The 20,000 ton American troop ship, Argentina as I saw her anchored in Plymouth Sound within sight of the shores of Britain. Aboard her were the Duke and Duchess of Windsor on their way to France. The Duke has come back from the United States wanting a job and hoping to find a permanent home. After five years absence they can see England again.

Before the Argentina left for Havre, in answer to a question I put to him, the Duke said, "I am coming back to England in the early part of October." Till then Au Revoir.

STOP PRESS

Pathe's last minute scoop on the Windsor's European travels takes the story as far as Le Havre. In conversation the Duke has made it plain that the present move to Paris has nothing permanent about it. He is set on bringing his wife to his homeland and to a home of their own. The Duke was last in France in 1940 as a liaison officer with the French Army. This time he wants his stay to be nothing longer than a preliminary to settling down in England.
