

RUNNING WILD

The thundering herd makes its last stand, as Canada rounds up two hundred thousand wild horses for shipment overseas. Like scenes from pioneering days, cowboys again ride trail over the Western Plains. Across the Elbow River in Alberta they bring them in, Indian ponies, mustangs, and unbroken prairie outlaws. Few have ever felt the touch of a bridle.

From the mountains and the plains it's moving day. Leaving freedom behind, their destined for Belgium where they'll either be persecuted or help rebuild a ravaged countryside.

The Suicide boys, the Hell Drivers, are back in action for the first time since the U.S. ended petrol rationing. Their war-time rest hasn't slowed them up a bit. They flirt with death every second of the run as the cars sway perilously. Steady hands are the only way to keep on living.

Just for vanity's sake they prove a flaming fence is no match for a hard head.

The slow motion camera reveals the audacity of these car-crazy drivers, deliberately somersaulting the car end over end, holding tight till it settles back on its wheels.

Top thrill for the crowds is served up by Johnny Rogers who drives with 2 broken ribs. He takes his steed up the steepest ramp of all, skimming over a truck on to the roofs of a line of cars.

Back to earth with out a scratch, but not recommended for Sunday Drivers.
