8th ARMY "SWEEPS ON"

The sixth Army team of housework experts calls at the office to pick up the orders of the day. Ex-navy man Bowler, Mrs Adie from the A.T.S. and demobbed men and women of all the services, are in on the ground floor of a new venture - - the Clean Homes Service. Ex-Wren Gledhill plans the day's programme; they tackle anything in the house-cleaning line - though it's reported they draw the line at spud-peeling, washing dishes and blanching.

The domestic help squad gets away to an early start, vacuums at the slope, and dusters soap and floor polish for ammunition.

What's a bit of paintwork after polishing army boots, and even this is easier than swabbing decks.

Now you know what to do next time the missus goes on strike; the army, the navy and the airforce will step in and take over.

The Clean Homes Service started as a gamble, with the Government's £150 re-settlement grant and a good idea to invest it in - - and who was it said there's no room for initiative nowadays. This is head-man of the outfit Richard Godley.

So far, there's a staff of ten; pay, £10 a week for men, £7 a week for women; a venture with a future.
