

H.M.S. FLYCATCHER

H.M.S. Flycatcher is the Navy's name for the old Fleet Air Arm station at Middle Wallop - now sailing a new course as a back-to-civvy-street training centre. To Middle Wallop come navy men due for early demob and looking out for a good shore going trade to turn their hands to. Take house building. There's more to it than slapping cement between bricks and the plaster on the walls, and H.M.S. Flycatcher has a good line in quick-fire training.

How to make a joint that'll outlast the old hammer and nail technique. Ratings who used to be so tough they shaved with a blow lamp find a new use for old skill. And when they get home what a time they'll have with the paint brush. Once one of the R.A.F.'s most famous night fighter stations, Middle Wallop does a grand new job, the navy way.
