

MR. MOLOTOV STEALS A PICTURE

With Russia's Mr. Molotov aboard, the Queen Elizabeth noses her way into New York's Hudson River. End of a trip that made sea history. And the famous New York skyline sees the world's biggest ship flying a British pennant.

Sharing the arrival-headlines with the Queen was UNO-bound Mr. Molotov and party. With his team of husky guards packing in around him the Soviet Foreign Minister startled everybody with an easy-going greeting. Quite a performance for the man who made No No Nanette sound like a yes-woman.

SOUND

With a record reception committee waiting and ex-Ambassador Gromyko sharing the honours, it was Mr. Molotov's moment. And afterwards, the huskies closed in and quick marched. Then, with Mr. M. off their minds the reporters swarmed over the ship. These Sameramen - they get all the breaks.

For New York it was a gala occasion. A sea-going Queen from Britain and a delegation from Moscow - all in one day.
