YOUR WORLD IN 9 MINUTES

Nine minutes - and a world to cover. So hold on to your seats for a rib-rattling roar through the Austrian hills.

SOUND

Coming up now is the smash that got Pathe a picture and the rider a brain concussion.

SOUND

It's the Styrian Motorbike classic; and it ends with the crash of the year.

Now a little difference of opinion. Here's European Champion, Baumann versus German wrestler Trinkgold - if you can sort 'em out.

SOUND

In this business, you take it on the bounce.

Now a look in at Ceylon's ceremony of the Perahera. Through Kandy city streets go the newly scrubbed, richly bedecked elephants. In the golden casket rides Buddhism's most sacred relic, the tooth of Buddha.

For 16 centuries, devout Buddhists have walked in the Perahera. For them, time stood still.

Home again - via English lanes to quiet Cockington. A few miles from Torquay, it celebrates a new milestone in a "hundred years of history." The whole village comes under the hammer. Later, villagers got the smiles and buyers a disappointment. Cockington went "under the counter" - it was sold privately for around a quarter of a million. So if you wanted to beat the beer shortage by buying lot 6 - (the local pub) - you missed your chance. Anyway, Cockington was valued at 5 bob in the Domesday Book - so 900 years have certainly pushed the price up.

To the Borough Hall, Darvall, Ayrshire comes the town's most distinguished citizen - Sir Alexander Fleming, discoverer of life-saving drug, Penicillin. From Provost Patterson, Sir Alexander receives the freedom of the borough.

Later, Darvall's new Burgess visited the old school house at Loudon Moor, where he went a s a boy. Now, with Lady Fleming, he returns with an international reputation. A great Scotman comes home.
