

THE STRIKE AND YOU!

Into London's great distribution centres move army convoys. Food distribution, crippled by the transport strike, is taken over by the military. In this struggle is personified one of the major problems facing the Labour Government today. Itself based on Trade Union support, it now meets a challenge from unofficial strikers who have defied their own unions. For transport men the strike means a 44 hour week, paid holidays, sick pay. For the public it means the fear of a return to the chaos of 1926. To the housewife especially it means new food hardships.

Yet even though their personal burdens are increased, our reporter found them determined to see fair play to the transport men. We hand our microphone over to the public.

Wanted! A new industrial charter.
