At Wembley's Empire Pool we sit in at the professional tennis tournament. Stars of our tennis circus and winners of the mixed doubles are America's Alice Marble and Bobby Riggs. They certainly did not exert themselves in this set. At the other end Mary Hardwick and Donald Budge seem to have forgotten Wimbledon style tennis. The final set was neither tournament nor exhibition play. Taking it all round it wasn't the tennis we expect from top names like Marble, Hardwick, Budge and Riggs.

The mixed doubles winners Alice Marble-Bobby Riggs. The prizes are presented by the wife of the Foreign Secretary Mrs. Ernest Bevin.

To London Airport from America comes skating film star Sonja Henie and two mink coats. She wore one of the coats - a pale grey squirrel coloured mink - the only one of this shade in the world. The other, she said, was just for travelling. Things went badly for Sonja. She was pushed off the front page by something else from the States. 1000 candles a gift from American women to help light up blacked-out Britain.

And here's the week's happiest story. Britain's top secret service agents Odette Sanson, G.C. and Captain Peter Churchill D.S.O., M.C. are married in London. Their love story began in Nazi-occupied France. They shared danger and the tortures of the Gestapo. Life begins again for two very gallant people.
