PEOPLE IN CAMERA

The very latest in fashion comes from these shapely glamour girls. The thing to do is to stick on any coloured, odd-shaped, smartly designed silken patch, on whatever parts of you you want other people to look at. On the legs they save coupons. On the face they give the old "come hither" look.

You won't look as if you've caught measles - the glamour patches are made in different sizes. Whatever will they think of next?

Introducing - the biggest camera lens in the newsreel industry, operated by cameraman Rickard. In the coming sports season this 56" lens will bring to the screen the sporting incidents that no other camera can see. At the Thames Head of the River Race - the 56" lens has its try out. From the same position an ordinary 2" lens took these pictures of the same incident.

Complete with 56" lens this camera weighs 450 pounds, its overall length is 6 feet. It is as powerful as a four draw telescope. In clear visibility objects a mile away are brought to the screen.

Into the laps of the audience this lens, the only one of its kind in the country, will bring the close-ups of sport. It gives you a ringside seat at all the sporting events.

This is what it will look like in the future - and - by comparison this is what it used to be like.

At Paris Colombes Stadium, the Welsh Rugby fifteen (in dark shorts) gain a 3-0 surprise victory over France. Unbeaten in their two previous matches, the French team started full of confidence. Once they realised the superiority of the Welsh forwards, they couldn't find that extra reserve of strength to save the situation.

The French three-quarters were passing the ball like artists. They were slicker, surer and a shade faster than the Welsh backs. France missed their opportunity when Prat No. 6 went wide with a penalty kick from 35 yards.

A capacity crowd packed the stadium. In brilliant sunshine, they saw a match full of deadly tackling and yet drab rugby. Despite first-time French passing their attacks were stopped by the Welsh backs. Watch Wales stop another effort by the Frenchman. Moving from back to centre, Newport's Ken Jones, letter B, gets away with the ball. Hitherto unbeaten, France may not now head the international championship table after all. The Wales-Ireland clash and the England-France match will decide who's to be the premier Rugby team. The four countries have an even chance.
