Spithead

After accompanying the Royal Family on the Royal Review of the Home Fleet, the future Prince Consort becomes just another naval Lieutenant again. Despite the many official duties connected with his approaching assumption of Royal rank, the Navy still has a prior call on Lieutenant Philip's services. Back on duty at the R.N. School at Corsham, Wiltshire, he inspects petty-officers who are taking his course.

Off-duty Lieutenant Philip describes highlights of the Royal Review to his wardroom companions. Until the Royal Wedding in November - it's the Navy first.

St. Nazaire

To St. Nazaire - five years after - veteran heroes went back to the scene of the blockship raid of 1942. France's Premier, M. Ramadier, presented decorations to the leaders of the action, V.C's Ryder, Newman and Beattie. Britain, too, remembered the valour of France, and Mr. Duff Cooper presented decorations. Here, British Victoria Cross and French Croix de Guerre hang side by side.

The Commandos - civilians again - march past the citizens of St. Nazaire to the spot where a memorial to the action is unveiled by the Premier. Only 270 of the 600 who fought at St. Nazaire survive today. But their epitaph endures on France's monument.

Rhyl

To Rhyl, in North Wales, Pathe takes you for its report on the Crisis Bank Holiday. Our reporter calls on Wales' holiday-making thousands, while the Sound Track records impressions of how Britain took the bad news which nearly made it Black Holiday.

Mr. Punch had just the word for it.

The donkeys heard about it from friends in the Cabinet and with the Crisis threatening the housing programme, Dad got in with a building plan of his own, while True Love, of course, finds a way round any crisis. With the future looking decidedly unsettled, our reporter visits the fortune-teller for guidance.
