ZOO HAS HEAT WAVE TOO

Hank the Camel got the hump in Britain's brightest August for 20 years. The zoo's inhabitants who came to London from the tropical side of the world thought they were back home. Even the birds changed their daily habits. It was non-stop 90 degree sunshine all the way - the perfect weather for a holiday month.

One gentleman who didn't let the heat get him down was Charlie the Chimp. He's had domestic crises before - this time he talked the Zoo authorities into changing his contract. Now he has his own personal water supply.

The Penguins topped the bill in the keep-cool competition. A bit rough on the shoes but it may suit you if you don't like walking on hot pavements.

For Peggy and the penguin chorus it was their sunniest-over August. For Britain, it was just about the year's brightest import.
