

tons of coal which have fallen off during loading. After twenty years, the water is now being dredged. Huge pumps lift the mud from the bottom and pipe lines carry it to a waste site in the town. There, Bremen citizens gather the coal out of the mud.

One persons can reclaim nearly three hundredweights of coal daily. These near the front have a better chance - but even at the back the search is still fruitful.

Although coal production in the Ruhr is improving, Germany again faces a bleak, fuel-less winter. This is the people's way of overcoming another hardship. But the week's news also brought a laugh. To London's Olympia, came Eric Barker and the Merry-Go-Round Gang for their two hundredth Radio Performance. The Weekly Hero of twelve million listeners, Eric Barker turns out to be a screen heart-throb as well.
