

And from their night with the stars, people went back to work. Overshadowing the week's news was still the London Conference. The enigmatic Molotov was reserving his surprises for later in the talks, although Mr. Marshall had appealed for quick decisions. The people would continue to watch the deliberations with eager interest. It was their future that was at stake.