General Eisenhower retiring Chief of Staff of the American Army swears in General Omar Bradley as his successor in the presence of President Truman. At his last press conference Ike, now President of the Columbia University, gives a direct answer to the pointed question 'Does Soviet Russia want war with the United States?'. "There is no great nation in the world today that would deliberately provoke a global war, a vast and productive industry is necessary to a nation with mountainous and quantity of supply build up, before it would attempt any such venture. Economies in all nations, except our own, and we know we do not want war, are far too broken and devastated by World War 2 to believe that they would deliberately start a war now".
