

WIDE WIDE WORLDLondon

A Tarzan cry heralds the entry into London of swimming ace Johnny Weissmuller and his newly married wife. No statue will be built to immortalize him, but in coming years men will still awe their children with his film exploits. Sporting the latest version of the newer look, his wife's fame extends to being Tarzan's mate.

A former American golf champion, 22 year old Allens Gates seems to have married more than a handful.

France

Endowed with no Tarzan attributes are the male citizens of St. Claude a smallish French town in the Jura district. On carnival day, they dress-up as a local version of the Ku Klux Klan and do their mate-hunting in bellowing style. Origin of this breezy custom antedates the Reformation. Peasants thought to be possessed by the devil were exorcised by local monks - and the devils were said to take refuge under the women's skirts. That's why every Ash Wednesday the Jura weather forecast reads: For all females, high winds from all quarters.

London

Along a windswept London street, Police Constable Edgar makes his last journey. 33 yearsold, his was a brutal death. Shot down by a gunman, Nat Edgar typified the courage of Britain's policemen.

From his colleagues and the nation come the last tributes to an officer, who sacrificed his life in the service of the public. Home Secretary Chuter Ede and the Commissioner of Police are at the graveside as - mourned by the family he left behind - Police Constable Edgar is laid to rest.
