WORLD AT YOUR ELBOW

London:

Taking a day off from state affairs the King and Queen, accompanied by Princess Margaret, go to Twickenham to watch the Army v Navy rugger match.

A clever penalty kick by scrum half Burgess is the first highlight of the game and the Navy in dark shirts gain a 3 point lead.

From a lovely to watch passing movement to the Army three quarters, the ball goes out to the wing man Jackson No.14. In a thirty yard run he gets to the corner for a touchdown. A fine conversion by full-back Walter now puts the Army in front.

Half time sees the Royal Family settling in their seats in expectation of more exciting things to come. This time England forward Bennett makes an opening for his Captain D.B. Vaughn to show his top speed and to score the first of his two tries. The Army come back on the attack and as excitement mounts Wilson cuts through the Navy defence and slips over for a good try. With the dark shirts leading 9 - 8 and a minute left to play its Smith's conversion that will settle the game. Walter must do his trick - and the Navy turn up the winners.
