Codsall

Villagers line the hilly road to Codsall's 12th Century Church - entrances to which are guarded by scores of uniformed and plain clothes police. Detectives scan all mourners attending the funeral service of Rex Farran - killed by a parcel bomb intended for his brother Roy. The dead man's parents and his three brothers - Keith, Roy and Ray follow the cortege as the procession moves slowly to the Church.

Since his Court Martial acquittal on a charge of murdering a Stern Gangster last year, Roy Farran has been threatened with death several times. At the graveside, he kneels in a last prayer for the brother who gave his life to save him.

London

Richard Attenborough and wife Sheila Sim lead the parade of Britain's film stars and the people who make them. Muriel Pavlow and Derek Farr are greeted by Lord and Lady Rothermere. Here comes Margaret Lockwood. Occasion for the get-together is the presentation of the "Daily Mail" Film Awards - Britain's Oscars. Last year's prize winning team, Anna Neagle, Herbert Wilcox and Michael Wilding - come again to collect another trophy. Patricia Roc - in black evening gown - arrives to join the party. The votes of two million picturegoers decide the award. For the third time in succession Margaret Lockwood is recognized as the best film actress of the year.

Bearded John Mills receives the popularity Oscar as the best actor of the year. Herbert Wilcox - as producer and director of the prize winning film "The Courtneys of Curzon Street" - receives his award. With wife and co-producer Anna Neagle - second in the popularity poll for the actress of the year - Wilcox notches another mark in his career of film maker. In a year - when British films made their mark all over the world - the presentation of the Oscars brings rewards to its stars.
