Palestine

Palestine becomes the final testing ground of the United Nations.

Each day of conflict builds up the fire of bitter racial hatred. Into the fire Count Bernadotte is cast by United Nations as last hope mediator. His wartime record as an intermediary raises him above suspicion of partisan sympathies. In Tel Aviv, his first task is to persuade Zionist leaders to agree to a month's truce. To this, Moshe Shertok, Jewish Foreign Minister agrees. With the Arabs, Bernadotte reaches similar agreement. Cease fire orders are given. United Nations has twenty eight days to justify the hopes placed in it by a perplexed world.

At London Airport, Pathe's reporter meets the latest batch of emigrants for Canada.

Thirty-two passengers in the first flight, have thirty-two different reasons for leaving England.

Canadian sponsored-airliners will carry 10,000 Britons to Canada in the next ten months.

London

Greeting London's Homeguards Parade, a quarter million sightseers, brave fitful showers to see the ceremony of Trooping the Colour. A police announcement is made.....

So for the first time in history, this picturesque ceremony is cancelled ... the sun breaks out to justify the spring hats, but the weather man, if hopes expressed come true, is now wearing a bowler.
