Motorchair invalids from all over Britain come to London's Richmond Park for their first annual get-together. Overcoming physical disability, many have travelled a long way. One steered his machine on a record run of 260 miles in one day. From such examples of great courage, others take new hope.

In an age of self-seeking, this display by those who have suffered is both a rebuke and a challenge. Having succeeded against their own infirmities, they highlight their sports day with an obstacle race. There are hurdles to be overcome at every stage.

There is a pleasant end to the obstacles and the afternoon. And although one triathlete finished first, there is no real winner. For here is a spirit of comradeship from which the community can learn much.
