ONE MINUTE NEWS.

Basket loads of Bilberries are being imported specially into Britain from the Bohemian mountains. Demand for this fruit - particularly keen in mining areas - by far exceeds home-grown supplies. Resisting all temptations to eat the fruit while it's fresh, pickers send their day's haul to Prague, from where it's flown to Britain. Over here miners wives are snapping it up - as bilberries stay fresh for long periods underground. Apart from Mr. Malotov's raspberries, bilberries must be the juiciest export from behind the iron curtain.

Hurry - Hurry - Hurry - to the eighth wonder of the world! Hank the Camel has a hump - Teddy the Bear can sit on his hind legs - but there has never been anything like this. For in Rome's zoo - a baby elephant has been born - for the first time in 70 years. And it's quite a baby. It's weight is 200 pounds. With that load to carry apart from all the things she's not supposed to forget, Miss Elephant will have a hard time keeping straight.

BILBERRIES FOR BRITAIN.

We are in the deep forests of the Šumava Mountains in Southern Bohemia. The shade of the old trees invites to rest.

But these people have come for other purposes: to gather the sweet riches of the forest, the bilberries. Their dexterous hands pick them quicker than your eyes can follow.

In spite of the temptation to eat all berries herself, little Jana's basket is quickly filling up.

The result of this pleasant afternoon's work will go a long way:

The berries are taken to Prague and from there rushed by plane to England.

We sincerely hope the people in Britain will enjoy them.
