HARRY TRUMAN WORKS A MIRACLE

Election eve in New York and Tom Dewey - the man who couldn't lose - winds up his campaign. On Election day, his opponent, Harry Truman - the man who couldn't possibly win - casts one certain vote for himself and his Democratic Party. Prophets, pundits and pollsters are unanimous that Governor Dewey has only to wait for the votes to be counted, before he can settle in the White House. But, in Times Square, as the first election figures roll in, journalists begin to eat their own words.

In Dewey's headquarters, waiting for the victory announcement, exhausted newsmen fall asleep, while history is being made at the Democrats House. As the key state of Illinois swings to Truman, his re-election becomes certain. Never has there been such a stunning political upset. Harry Truman - the little man who refused to be beaten - who hit out against overwhelming odds - scores a triumph for the common man and for progress.
