MONTY MOVES INTO PARIS H.Q.

Field Marshal Montgomery - the Western Union's Commander-in-Chief, arrives at Orly airport on his way to his new Paris headquarters. Senior French Officers, who greet him, are glad that Monty has chosen their capital as his base for the newly set up Western Command. For the French are convinced that Europe must be defended on the Continent itself and that a Western Union defence plan not based on the Continent would be a farce.

At Fontainebleau - once the headquarters of Napoleon - Monty will set up his watch on the Rhine. With American military lease-lend available soon, Western Union defence is off to a good start.
