

WANTED - AN UGLY MANNEQUIN

In search of the Perfect Mannequin, Mayfair dress designer Paul de Lange startles the fashion world and upsets all the rules of chivalry by advertising in a newspaper for an ugly girl. Surprisingly, over 70 self-confessed "Plain Janes" reply. And here's the first applicant. What she lacks in oomph, she makes up for in honesty.

The designer claims it's elementary feminine psychology. Glamorous models give the plain customer an inferiority complex; an ordinary looker makes her feel like Betty Grable by comparison.

Though they haven't the looks of a Venus, all the girls have what a fashion model needs - pleasant personality, lovely figures, and a good profile. (Confidentially - which one would you choose?)
