To Mountfield's eight hundred year old All Saints Church comes Princess Margaret to attend morning service with her weekend host - Commander Egerton. The whole village turns out to see the Princess arrive.

For this tiny Sussex hamlet it's a great occasion, Invited by "Master Tom," (as the 31-year-old son of Commander Egerton is known locally), Princess Margaret is Mountfield's first royal visitor for many years. And the villagers have gone all out to make the Princess' stay at the Squire's house as happy and restful as possible.

In Washington, General Dwight Eisenhower comes back to an old home with his familiar smile. Recalled to Army duties, Ike joins Defence Secretary James Forrestal as chief adviser to President Truman on military strategy. Eisenhower hopes to resume his Presidency at Columbia University in a few months time.

London - another American - and a farewell party for boxer Lee Savold. Freddy Mills is among the well-wishers of the sport-and-stage world present and also rubber-faced Sid Field.

Everyones says how sorry he is Lee Savold's going home. Tommy Trinder looks a picture of misery. And, with their coming battle in mind, Mills and Savold part good friends - until the next meeting. Then Arthur Ashby and the Crazy Gang go to work and everything steps for laughs.

Savold, who lost to Bruce Woodcock on a foul, takes on all comers with a smile. Goodbye and come back soon to a good sportsman.
