

FIREWORKS BY BOY BOXERS

Teen-age contestants weigh-in at London's Royal Albert Hall for the capital's junior boxing finals - the boys clubs' championships. Although there are shiny cups as prizes, it's the honour of representing their club that really counts. This is the 7-stone-class -(14 to 15 year-olds). Tommy Rudolf, a warehouse assistant in striped shorts, meets schoolboy Johnny Stanley.

And Rudolf is the winner. Supervised with the same vigorous routine as a professional fight, the bouts prove once again that if Britain wants to find some world-beaters, they must be spotted when they are young. In a 6-and-a-half stone contest - (the highlight of the evening), 14-year-old Bill Bradshaw ( in striped shorts) meets Freddy Nielsen, and what a scrap it turns out to be.

Bradshaw is the winner. Then comes the presentation of a memorial cup by Police Commissioner, Sir Harold Scott to Denis Hall, for the finest all-round performance.
